CHI "DEMOGRAPHIC COLLAPSE" OF YOUNG WORKERS IN WESTCHESTER AND LONG ISLAND STUDY SHOWCASED

News12 Long Island, Newsday, The Journal News and others cover disturbing new trend.

Citing the results of a new study that finds that the most exclusive suburbs on Long Island and in Westchester County are losing their young workforce at an accelerating rate, housing advocates and business leaders called on the state attorney general to take action to enforce existing law. The study by Community Housing Innovations, Richest Communities on Long Island and in Westchester Experiencing Demographic Collapse of Young Adult Workforce, found that since 2000, villages and towns with the most expensive housing have seen a large exodus of young adults 25-34.

Homeless schoolchildren numbers soar as federal funds decline

March 16, 2014 by LAURA FIGUEROA /
laura.figueroa@newsday.com

The number of homeless schoolchildren has quadrupled in Nassau County and more than doubled in Suffolk since the recession first hit -- even as federal funding for homeless student programs has decreased.

While Long Island's economy is recovering, the number of homeless families continues to grow, according to state and county figures.

The uptick has strained resources in many districts already beset by layoffs and reduced state education aid. Social service programs for the children and their families also have experienced federal, state and county budget cuts.
